100th Anniversary

FOUR GENERATIONS APPROX. 7,000 AUCTIONS OVER 3 MILLION LOTS SOLD

Dunbar Sloane occupies a rare position in New Zealand business life. Since its first auction in 1919 – a century ago – the Wellington based firm has been headed by four generations of the same family, each carrying the distinctive name of the founder Dunbar Sloane.

All have shown entrepreneurial flair, a necessary degree of showmanship when on the auction rostrum, and been tireless in promoting their company in Wellington and nationally.

The founder Andrew Dunbar Sloane (1875 to 1955) put the company on a solid footing. His son Clifford Dunbar Sloane (1912 to 1972) loved the auction podium, always seeking to give auction goers a spirited memorable time.

Thirdly his son Dunbar Russell Sloane (1942-2017) further built the business and ensured it adapted to the more specialist sales – and glossy, informative catalogues – needed today. Today, in the fourth generation, his son Dunbar Michael Sloane continues to actively follow in this tradition.

Surviving for a century is a remarkable achievement in the dynamic and highly competitive auctioneering world.

Until the 1970s every town had several competing firms: relatively few exist today. Traditionally many were small family run businesses competing with real estate or stock and station companies that also held regular estate or general auctions.

Changing consumer attitudes have brought enormous and intensifying challenges. Only the fleet footed traditional auctioneering firms have survived, especially under the same management. The famous international auction houses – Christies and Sotheby's - have had numerous ownership changes.

This willingness to adapt to an ever changing business environment has been a characteristic of the Dunbar Sloane family.

In the 1930s, when paintings were usually included in sales with furniture and other items, the firm was holding specialist art sales. In January 1935 it sold a collection of scenic views by Ernest Drake – which must have been a success - as a month later it sold another collection on behalf of Auckland painter J D Perrett.

The firm has been at the forefront in actively promoting auctions of international quality in art and antiques, historic books, wine, militaria, Maori artefacts, jewellery, rare manuscripts, collectables and old toys that often attract overseas interest, while continuing to hold regular sales of estate chattels.

It had unusual beginnings. Andrew Dunbar Sloane was a chemist with a shop on Lambton Quay. He joined the New Zealand forces at the outbreak of World War I and at 37, as an army captain on hospital ship Maheno, sailed to Turkey in July 1915. The Maheno made five visits to Anzac Beach under steady gun fire to pick up the wounded.

The Evening Post later reported he had also been gassed at Gallipoli. This forced a change of career: in those days chemist shops mixed many of their own chemicals with resultant unpleasant fumes. On his return he opted to switch careers promptly converting his shop to an auctioneering and land agency business. He became a registered land valuer in 1924.

Earlier in 1919 he had stood for Parliament for the Liberal Party. In campaign meetings for that election he was an outspoken supporter of the “forgotten men” who had served in the merchant marine and who, he said he had seen on the hospital ships working 70 hours on end helping doctors and nurses evacuate injured troops as well as negotiating the ships safely through German minefields.

The Evening Post described him in an article at the time as “the erstwhile chemist Dunbar Sloane, a not inconsiderable figure in Wellington’s commercial life, who now wields an auctioneer’s hammer in place of the pestle.

“Land is what he now knocks down, after first cracking it up.”

Newspaper advertisements from the period show the firm was also active in auctioning properties and land sales in the lower North Island.

In 1931 they staged an “enormous” sale in Levin of “unclaimed cargo of ladies’ high class wear, 2 and 3 piece costumes.” Dunbar Sloane said they had already staged a similar auction in Wellington “that the residents are taking full advantage of.”

In November 1938 The Evening Post reported Dunbar Sloane had begun a series of sales from a major collection of antiques formed by the late “Mr Linley” A highlight was a mahogany Sheraton table which it said was “reputed to have been brought ashore by Captain Hobson on which was signed the Treaty of Waitangi.” This fetched 20 pounds.

During these years the company continued to hold special catalogued auctions, a notable one being of “the Wilson sale of objects of art, Persian and Chinese carpets” in July 1949.

Andrew Dunbar Sloane died in England in 1955.

Management of the firm had already passed to his son, Clifford Dunbar Sloane. His nephew Paul Neal – who also became a well-known auctioneer with the firm – described him as a “wonderful auctioneer” who had acted as a mentor to him. His uncle had taught him not to get too nervous “but to get your patter going!”

In the immediate post war years under his management the firm thrived helped by the tonnes of army surplus gear the government was selling. It dominated the Wellington auction business and by 1970 had two busy auction rooms operating, including one in Dixon Street.

Shortly before his death in 1972 he called in, looking extremely unwell, during a crowded auction there. Paul Williams interrupted the sale from the rostrum to pay him a handsome tribute for his contributions to the auction world.

His son, Dunbar Russell Sloane, on taking control cemented the company’s position to become a major force nationally in selling top line fine art, antiques and other items, and competing successfully against vigorous competitors in Auckland, Christchurch and Dunedin.

Dunbar Russell Sloane was a risk taker. In the 1960s he had managed to convince his father – who was extremely dubious - to resume staging specialist art sales. In a newspaper interview in 2017, shortly before he died, he recalled his father’s reluctance. “He was worried about losing 3000 to 4000 pounds turnover a week while that sale was set up as we needed special lighting. But in our first sale we took about 18,000 pounds. It was amazing.”

By today’s standards the early catalogues are primitive booklets. Most illustrations are in black and white though they graphically highlight changing fashions.

A restless man, he was constantly ready for new ventures. To his immense disappointment, the public company, Dunbar Sloane and European Art, that had been set up to invest in art did not suit public ownership with shareholders demanding regular dividends. Ironically it was bought by Guinness Peat, a company run by Sir Ron Brierley, which in turn some years later ended up with most of its assets being sold.

The key to success in the auctioneering business is finding things the public wants to buy and successfully promoting them. Dunbar Russell Sloane regularly visited many parts of the country scouring and appraising items for sale, as continues now in the fourth generation. He also bought stock overseas on frequent buying trips. A keen collector himself he often bought back unusual items that his cousin Paul Neal considered would be difficult to sell, including on one occasion gymnastic equipment from the Queen Mary.

Today specialist staff Anthony Gallagher and art expert Helena Walker continue to fulfil this key role from Wellington, travelling widely through the central North and South Islands.

His son, Dunbar Michael Sloane, the current managing director is equally active in operating the successful Auckland representative office while also spending much time in the capital, including wielding the auction gavel at major sales.

The company has also been fortunate in retaining the expertise of many staff in key roles for many years. Among them is Bettina Frith who is regarded as a national expert in fine china, jewellery and rare toys.

The company has built a solid foundation to begin its second century of operations.
